

Never Been Kissed
Owen Danoff

Baby, I'm working downtown, in its million shades of gray
Where people roll their eyes at love, or else they run away
Like it's a hand grenade without a pin, or just one more thing to stop believing in Baby I'm working downtown, but you know I want to leave
I want to take the car, swing by the bar, and take you home with me
And even though our friends might talk like any day, we'll turn and walk
I believe that what we've got is real

They can call me crazy, another hopeless fool
But they've never been kissed, they've never been kissed by you
And they've never been kissed if they've never been kissed by you

Baby, your touch is magic; I haven't felt the ground in days
You swept me off my old cold feet and off my feet I've stayed
Some people walk around prepared to never try or cry or care
But you know when we met, I dared to fall

They can call me crazy, another hopeless fool
But they've never been kissed, they've never been kissed by you
They can call me crazy, believing love is true
But they've never been kissed, they've never been kissed by you
And they've never been kissed if they've never been kissed by you

And everyone that says that this'll never last is just plain wrong
'Cause even though we fell so fast our love is strong
And when your lips touch mine, I know I'm right where I belong

And they can call me crazy, maybe already do
But they've never been...

Yeah, they can call me crazy, another hopeless fool
But they've never been kissed, they've never been kissed by you
They can call me crazy, believing love is true
But they've never been kissed, they've never been kissed by you
And they've never been kissed if they've never been kissed by you
