

There She Goes Again

Owen Danoff

I watched her drive away today, for the thousandth time
She still smelled like rainy yesterday when her cheek touched mine
I guess a hug goodbye is all I'll ever know
Because she's close enough to touch but not to hold

There she goes again

I wonder if she's read my heart and lets it ache
Or if she doesn't know her part, the role she plays
Because I've always wanted more than being friends
But I'm holding on to anything I can, and there she

There she goes again
There she goes again

And I want to tell her I would drop
Everything, if she said the word
Want her to know that I'd stop
All my plans to be in hers
I want to be her man, but I'm scared I'll scare her away
It's too much to stand, but I can't bring myself to say
So I say

There she goes again
There she goes again
There she goes again